

What does your January look like? Here at Decapolis, we are already in full swing—collecting manure and green and brown organic material for compost piles, building compost piles, and setting up our training calendar for 2025.

Last year, with your support, we and over 1,000 farmers in more than 50 communities produced 45 tons of organic fertilizer, helping families to have healthier, more productive crops with little to no input cost. Our goal this year is to reach 10,000 small-scale Nigerian farmers with training in regenerative agriculture and wise money management, while sharing with them the redemptive message of the Gospel.

We are excited to see all of the requests coming in and for the many opportunities to partner with other ministries and various communities across the country. However, such partnerships do bring their own challenges. In Nigeria, the broken, Western-aide system has contributed to the cycle of poverty, hunger, and dependency. What we are offering is sustainability, which is a threat to dependency. That means that the very help and empowerment we are offering can be seen as a threat.

We are grateful for the guidance and support of Equipping Farmers International, and we ask for prayers for wisdom and discernment, as well as strength for the year ahead.
